Dear Colonel:

This is a copy of a cablegram received from Marseilles,
from an absolutely authentic source:

"LUIGI TRANSFERE MAISON DANS TARN ETAT SANTE TRES GRAVE PRIONS DEMARCHES URGENTES."

The Luigi referred to is Luigi Gallo. His being put in prison is a very serious thing. Only the quickest, most decisive action can now save him. Please suggest anything that we as an organization, or I, can do to get Gallo out. I think there remains very little time during which anything can be done. If you can possibly think of anything, please let me know at once.

Dear Colonel Donovan,

I was a little puzzled by the observation in the letter you were good enough to write on September 5, that "due to the nature of your work" you doubted that you could make use of my services. Then it occurred to me that your staff at 2 Wall could not have put before you my letter, written at the moment of the release of the President's executive order, in which I had ventured to tell you that for a dozen years, at the New York Reserve Bank, I had done exactly your kind of work -- in what then seemed its principal aspect.

Now that I learn of the engagement by your Office of two first-rate fellows -- Bill Despres and Chas Morse -- who had worked under me at the Reserve Bank, and one of whom I had myself trained in research and information, I feel confirmed in my suspicion that my letter of last July got lost in the mass of offers of services that must then have come to you.

Thus is written simply to get into the record that I organized and ran for a dozen years the Foreign Research Division of the New York Reserve Bank, and that the services I offered in the letter you never saw were by no means the services of a man of letters. Coordination, analysis, and recommendations upon the basis of, at least, foreign information, gleaned from published and unpublished sources and from periodic trips abroad, was my trade.

Sincerely yours,

Lewis Galantier

My dear Mr. Galantiere:

Thank you very much for your letter. First, as to the army suggestion--that I have passed on to the War Department. Second, as to the German propaganda man--as you know since he is not a citizen he could not be hired by us, but it might be that he could make some use of his services. I would like to talk with you further about this.

Third, as to your services--I doubt that due to the nature of our work we could make use of your talents, but I am very much interested in discussing the situation with you. When I next go to New York I will try to let you know in advance.

Sincerely,

Dear Colonel Donovan,

I was walking on 57th Street the day when traffic suddenly stopped and everything stopped to allow the passage of a file of army vehicles about half a mile long down the 57th Street bridge, I think. Mostly they were trucks, and each truck carried one or eight men, but there were also a number of mounted guns in the Cavalcade.

I am not a particularly militaristic fellow, yet
I must say that I got a shiver out of every one of those dependably looking boys, those Immortals-like Trucks, and those handsome guns to which everything gave the input of way as they moved along at about 30 or 40 miles an hour.

I can't but believe that everything was

who saw them felt the same about that went through me.

The reason why I am writing this to you is that it would, to my mind, be a very good thing if more Americans living not directly near the concentrations and pits could get some photo from time to time -- say a couple of times a month, or once a week -- in the same accidental way that I did. Accidental, but planned accident. If people want the country closed, by the occasional passing through town of such a convoy, but the feeling that the army was not immediately visible removed young men from their "legitimate" occupations and showed them away to poor markets and primary in things called army camps.

 impressive, and business-like national defense force, a thing which, more naturally seen in the movie, inspired confidence and pride in the attitude of the nation towards its defense program, and its mental state of preparedness. Would, I am sure, be what the Government and many of our thinking citizens want it to be.

What do you think of the notion that, for purposes of national morale, the staff might greatly order the most commendable to send out little groups from time to time for strong, is it worth taking up with them?

Second subject. If you should have the minds of our people work in other propaganda directed to the important. I have just written with him a long paper on Nazi diplomacy and public relations work as it was in the Reich, where he was Counselor of the German Legation.

 When it is published, I shall send it to you. It is not sensational, but is concerned with other facts.

My 3. I imagine that the

Dear Colonel Donovan,

I was walking on 57th Street the other day when traffic whistles suddenly sounded and everything stopped to allow the passage of a file of army vehicles about half a mile long bound for the 59th Street Bridge, I think. Mostly they were trucks and each truck carried six or eight men; but there were also a number of mounted guns in the cavalcade. I am not a particularly militaristic fellow, yet I must say that I got a thrill out of seeing those sturdy, dependable looking boys, those business-like trucks, and those handsome guns to which everything gave the right of way as they moved along at about 30 or 40 miles an hour. I can't but believe that everybody who saw them felt the same thrill that went through me.

The reason why I am writing this to you is that it would, to my mind, be a very good thing if more Americans living not directly near the cantonments and forts could get this thrill from time to time - say a couple of times a month, or once a week - in the same accidental way that I did. Accidental, but planned accident. If people around the country could, by the occasional sending through town of such a cavalcade, get the feeling that the army was not something which removed young men from their "legitimate" occupations and sent them away to grim morbid and grisly in things called army camps, but was instead a solid, impressive and business-like national defense force, a thing which, once actually seen on the move, inspired confidence and pride, the attitude of the nation towards the defense program, and its mental state of preparedness would, I am sure, be what the Government and mostly all thinking citizens want it to be.

What do you think of the notion that, for purposes of national morale, the staff might quietly order the post commanders to send out little tours from time to time? Is it worth taking up with them?

Second subject: If you should have in mind doing radio work or other propaganda directed to the German people, I have a German who ought to be consulted. He is not one of the refugee intellectuals, but a man who has spent 15 years in the German diplomatic service, seven of them under the Nazis, and what he knows, and how he views these things, I find very impressive. I have just written with him a long piece on Nazi espionage and fifth-column work as he saw it in Holland, where he was counsellor of the German legation. When it is published, I shall send it to you. It is not sensational, but is crammed with sober fact.

No. 3. I imagine that the letter I wrote in June or July offering my services went astray. No matter. I still hope to have a talk with you one of these days. I shall be back on 73rd Street after Labor Day.

Dear Colonel Donovan,

not here

Thank you for your note. I have just read the Times story, and my interest is greater than ever.

At the Federal Reserve Bank of New York I organized and ran for a dozen years an office called the Foreign Information Division. Into that office was routed everything that reached the bank which could serve as the basis of policy and action in our relations with the forty-odd foreign central banks that maintained accounts and did business with us. As regards bulk, our raw material was chiefly printed matter, but there was also available to us the stream of cable and mail reports from the U.S.A. financial attachés (and later the Treasury attachés detailed for service with our embassies and legations) to the State Department, as well as the personal correspondence between the Head of the bank and the governors of the foreign central banks. The product of ~~our~~ this analysis was twofold -- first, the drafting of memoranda setting forth, or recommending action in respect of, specific situations; secondly, the distribution to certain officers of the bank, to the Board at Washington, and to the Presidents of the eleven other reserve banks, of a weekly bulletin of foreign information. In addition, I had odd jobs to do which I must say were of more interest than this routine -- participation in the drafting of stabilization plans for certain foreign currencies, in arrangements for gold loans and dollar credits to foreign central banks, &c. But the work of organization and staff administration is presumably what most interests you at this stage. If you sent to Allan Sproul (now president of the New York reserve bank, and with whom I worked directly for a number of years) the Times cutting, and asked him if this was the sort of work I could do as well as anybody, I believe you would get a satisfactory answer -- though of course a prudent one in the best Scots-cum-Wall-Street tradition. If you quoted to him the first, second, and fourth sentences of this paragraph, he would confirm them.

I don't know that I want a permanent post unless our international situation changed pretty radically; but, if you had nobody else specifically in mind for the job, I'd be glad to undertake to set up your machinery for you and stay long enough to get it running smoothly.

This letter is written because of the likelihood that something may intervene to make it impossible for you to see Saint-Ex and me next week. I should mention also that I received this morning a summons to serve as juror in the United States District Court as from July 16. If you should want to use me this month, a letter to that effect, which I could present to the Clerk of the Court next Wednesday, might serve to release me. Meanwhile I hope that nothing will intervene to prevent our meeting early in the coming week.

Yours sincerely,

Dear Colonel Donov n:

It seems imperative that something concrete be done regarding bases in Ireland.

My suggestion is the transmission of a monster petition of Irish-born citizens and citizens of Irish descent urging the granting of bases to President Eamon de Valera IMMEDIATELY.

I am a publicist, born in Ireland and know about all the possible publicity angles. My best reference is Dr. Henry F. Grady, president of the American President Lines and former assistant secretary of state. Harry is in Washington now. I was last in contact with him the first of the month. He then said he was going to Washington on Dec. 6th and that he would return here after the holidays.

Can I go to work?

Very sincerely yours

Dear Colonel Donovan:

I have been talking with my brother-in-law, Harper Sibley, and as he feels the following might possibly be of interest to you, I take pleasure in writing.

A few years ago, either when I was serving as Naval Attache in our Brussels Embassy or Lisbon Legation or here at home, I wrote a report to Captain William D. Puleston, who was at that time Director of Naval Intelligence.

I had been so struck by the coordination between the various British intelligence sources and felt the lack of this here at home that, after describing the British system, I urged a somewhat similar one for the United States, naturally with allowances for our differences in problems and point of view. I illustrated the manner in which the Military and Naval Intelligence Offices, the Diplomatic and Consular Services, the Civil Service, the Secret Service - or Scotland Yard, the Custom House and the commercial and other services etc., all cooperated, conferred, compared their various services reports on any one pertinent topic and final reports based on the summarized and evaluated consensus of opinion were then forwarded the Cabinet Minister particularly interested. The gentleman acting as the hub of the intelligence wheel was unknown to all except the Prime Minister and the Chief of the Imperial General Staff.

"Look for all and all for France"

Being permitted by Captain Fuleston to take the matter of better coordination between our own services, I had several conferences with Mr. Phillips, who was then Under-Secretary of State, resulting at the time in the decision to hold regular meetings of the Under-Secretary and the Directors of Military and Naval Intelligence and possibly also a representative of the Department of Justice.

My report on the subject must be filed away some where in O.N.I. and if of interest, of course available to you.

Believe me,

Faithfully yours,

John A. Gade

TO THE CITIZENS OF NEW YORK

We who have long been in the forefront of the battle to defend democracy believe that the hour has struck when we must speak out in behalf of Mayor LaGuardia, who has made New York City the foremost living example of democracy in action at a time when democracy everywhere is in the gravest peril.

We are convinced that in the elections of November 4th Mayor LaGuardia will stand as the symbol of inspiring and practical democracy and living proof of its necessity to mankind. We believe that an overwhelming victory for Mayor LaGuardia will provide a hopeful sign to those who share our belief in the ultimate triumph of all those things which the United States of America represents.

Our devotion to the cause of freedom has impelled us as individuals to work in the ranks of various organizations which today are fighting on every front to make democracy secure and, coupled with our love of New York City, leads us to make our views public.

Realizing the peril to democratic institutions in the world today, we urge the citizens of New York now to support one of democracy's great leaders, F. H. LaGuardia.

The Secretary of State

My dear Mr. Secretary:

It is requested that an appropriate Diplomatic Passport be issued to Mr. Gerald C. Gross, Chief of Broadcast Division, Federal Communications Commission, who has been designated to make a special study for this office on communication problems in London during war-time. In addition to specific problems relating to radio, Mr. Gross plans to make a confidential investigation for me on other related matters.

Mr. Gross plans to leave for London sometime during the last week of August, using the Trans-Atlantic Ferry Service leaving from Bolling Field. He plans to return the same way.

A Diplomatic Passport is requested because if for certain reasons the Ferry Service should not be available, it would be necessary for him to return by Clipper and it is desired to expedite his passage through foreign Customs in every way possible. He will, of course, be carrying confidential documents of a secret nature.

For your information Mr. Gross has been assigned to this office for the period August 25 to October 15 under authority of a letter signed by James Lawrence Fly, Chairman of the Federal Communications Commission and also Chairman of the Defense Communications Board.
